FALL PLANTING IS BETTER FOR MOST SHRUBS

In most sections of the country the ground is in excellent condition in the fall for planting and most shrubs and trees will have a head start on next year if planted at that time.

Fall planting enables plants to grow and become well established before the colder months set in. Usually, because there is more rainfall they will not require so much watering to keep them healthy, though they should be watered thoroughly when set out, and normally thereafter if needed. In the late winter months plants will start to grow much earlier in the season if set out the previous fall. They will already have been through their period of getting established and they will have have better flowers or foliage or fruit, as the case may be, than if the early spring weeks are required for the plants to become established.

In the fall most plants in commercial nurseries after a summer of growth are in the healthiest possible state for transplanting to home properties. This is true of evergreens as well as deciduous plants.

There are three things which make for good planting. First, make sure that the hole dug for any plant is large enough for its roots to be spread out flat with ample space beyond the root tips for them to grow. Secondly, unless the soil is normally fertile, make a mixture of good soil and peat moss and pour it in the hole both below and above the roots so that it covers them completely.

Third, soak the plant and soil thoroughly at the time of planting and thereafter as needed. It is not advisable to fertilize in the fall as it may encourage soft growth. In front-free areas, however, fall fertilizing may be advisable. Consult with your nurseryman. Best time to fertilize generally is in the late winter or early spring, and then again just after the flowering period of the plant.

Winter watering of plants is very beneficial where snowfall or rains are insufficient during the cold months. Plants that go into the winter without sufficient water in the soil are more likely to suffer damage from wind and cold. Where winters are severe special protection with mulches of salt hay, peat moss and even burlap windbreaks may be necessary with certain plants. Consult your nurseryman as to any special or local planting advice for individual species. But gear most of your planting of trees and shrubs to the fall months so they'll be able to take advantage of late winter and early spring growth.

IN FASHION NOW

From Paris comes the word that women will be broad-shouldered and hipless this fall and winter. Not included in this bit of news was exactly how one is to go about achieving this goal if born otherwise.

The first local step would seem to be a bit of padding in the shoulders—the next a good "new" girdle. It is true that for the first time since the New Look revolution in 1946 shoulders are padded.

There has also been a slight lengthening of skirts by several of Europe's leading designers. Jean Patou calls the waist "normal." However, his creations are never nipped in at the waist or marked by a seam. It is lightly fitted by cut and just about where it belongs, with a tendency to be high.

Party dresses are boffant, skirted from the hips, with close-clinging torsos. The slinky, strapless long, evening gown is in favor again.

There are many heavily embroidered bodices for cocktail and evening wear.

The padded shoulders are not squared. They slope, with the padding put in at a low sleeveline.

Mannik Prince Albert coats and tunic-length suits and jackets are very much in the fashion picture. They look somewhat like riding habits. It takes a tall woman to do credit to this design.

The man who had to live

This man has sat in the hospital corridor for four hours.

The parents of an injured child are sitting across from him.

In a matter of minutes a surgeon will come from the operating room and tell them the child, just nine, is dead.

The man will rise to his feet and face the parents. There will be nothing he can do and little he can say. He will wish with all his heart that the accident had not happened.

Now, of course, it is too late. The child is dead; the man must live.

He wasn't speeding, and he was on his side of the street. The child ran directly into the path of his car.

But in his heart, he's guilty. He forgot the carefreeness of youth. He failed to remember that youngsters think and act like youngsters. He failed to think for anyone except himself. He failed a nine-year-old child.

Schools are opening throughout the land, and millions of youngsters are on the go. When you drive your car, drive safely, and think for those youngsters as well as yourself. You may save a life — and spare yourself a tragedy you'll have to live with the rest of your days.

For the Sixth Time . . .

The coveted E. H. Harriman Memorial Gold Medal has been awarded to the Norfolk and Western Railway for the most outstanding record in safety and accident prevention among the nation's major railroads during 1954.

The Norfolk and Western is justly proud of this record and pledges its continued efforts to the promotion of safety.
